Note: The Essay should be in an interesting story form (not an academic article) and should ideally cover references to childhood, family background, personality traits, likes, dislikes, hobbies, skills, strengths, weaknesses, resources, network etc. and must include some interesting real-life anecdotes. More than the form and content, it is the objective which is of utmost importance. I would suggest you look at the following objectives for the Essay:

1. Anyone who reads it must feel like reading it till the end, and like reading it again.
2. If & when your parents read it, they should stop worrying about you and start respecting & caring for your dreams.
3. If & when your close friends read it, they should start feeling that as much as friends must have a great time together, they must not end up distracting you from your ambitions.
4. If strangers read it (yes; because you are going to feel like putting it out on social media), they should feel like connecting with you.
5. If your other teachers read it, they should feel, "Oops... I never realised this side of the boy/girl!"
6. Last, but not the least, when you read it, you must feel like not deleting it; EVER!

Happy writing!
